Layla [REDACTED] oh, I don't think I missed the entire lack of diversity in North Dakota where everyone who isn't pasty white is not "from here" ... Is it worth pointing out that anyone who IS white has only been here the last few hundred years, you know before pushing the natives out? But educated guess, you assume that anyone that isn't Norwegian is an "outsider" ... welcome to being xenophobic! You fit the description well sir 😊

Johnny [REDACTED] Personally I read it as a statement of those who came to ND as a part of the oil boom. North Dakota has diversity, but things slowly went downhill as people moved here and brought their families.

Layla [REDACTED] My point was it seems incredibly rude and xenophobic to say if you don't have a birth certificate from ND (and your parents too) then you are just a horrible person (as the inferences were made). What does it say about the community if these girls have been here for close to a decade and haven't adapted to the "morals of ND". From the comments on this posting it seems like ND is full of racist and hateful people who are totally non accepting, which is terribly saddening to me. Do I believe these girls should face charges, absolutely. If the woman won't press charges than the elderly gentleman who was hit should. The girls actions and attitude after fact show that they are classless, but acting like this happens all the time and is only perpetuated by "outsiders" is beyond words. Every time a news article hits with something negative it must be a native with a drug issue or someone from "outside". Has it really gotten worse or is the media just now starting to pay attention forcing the citizens to pay attention?
Rant over

Diana [REDACTED] Well Layla [REDACTED] when I lived in Oklahoma City I was the "outsider" however I behaved as my new city asked ... I didn't bring booze into their city and I also worked in the low income side of the city in a clinic in hopes of making a difference. Coming here and behaving as they did, and I don't care what color you are, is not acting like the residents of this city. This is not the type of behavior that is acceptable in this city. Understand?

Unlike · Reply ·  1 · February 26 at 9:21pm

 LaRayne Maybe. But not at this level and certainly not a common occurrence. Petty theft, DUI's and the like. Not brawling at the local mall and injuring young mothers with children and the elderly. The moral compass was in much better shape even 3 years ago. The born and raised here aren't the ones exhibiting the extreme behavior, for the most part.

Like · Reply ·  1 · February 27 at 5:24am

Linda [REDACTED] Really, Mandy? Look at the crime statistics over the last 10 years- the increases are unbelievable. As for what happened at Kirkwood, this would never (and didn't) happen prior to the change in demographics. When I went to college (which for the first 2 years was a historically black university), people asked what it was like growing up in a state that was homogenous, and if that created prejudice. Of course it didn't, because I had no negative experiences to create them. For people who now see this assault on the news, happening in their town- what do you think they see? These "women" are representing the change in population, whether they care about it or not (and they obviously don't). If people want to be accepted and become members of a community, than be a positive addition like so many others have done. If not, move elsewhere. No one would miss them.

Like · Reply · February 27 at 12:35pm

Mandy [REDACTED] I know the terms I used could be considered racist by some I used them on purpose. I am of Irish descent and extremely proud of my heritage. Creator blessed me with glowing the dark pasty skin. I wasn't the first on this thread to use the term hick and it still is far less than other comments used in regards to what happened in the mall. I don't need to check myself. I feel as though I got my point across. I'm wondering While Linda [REDACTED] was at college out of state discussing prejudices in this legendary state, did you mention the systematic genocide of our first nations people that is still happening today? This very assault includes one of there very own and I am greatful you all are standing up for her and her baby. More still needs to be done. These "women" acted on insecurities. The main "woman" took advantage of her friends who were more than willing to be her puppets, rather than stand up for themselves. If this world has any chance at healing we need to reach out and empower people. This kind of violence is learned behavior and fear and hate and negative attention from media spreads it like wildfire. Its not just in good ol ND its a global problem. its not in one race. its in our government systems, our churches, our schools, our doorsteps. Dereck [REDACTED] Gtfo? of where exactly? I would like you to clarify this for me.

Like · Reply · February 27 at 1:41pm

Linda [REDACTED] While I was at college, I did a major research project and presentation on Wounded Knee. So the answer to your question is a yes. Please do not attempt to use the atrocities committed against the early inhabitants of this country as an argument to dismiss the crimes of others in the present. It's a popular theme, and seen in memes and bullet statements in an effort to appear clever. But it's misplaced and an empty excuse. These women are adults, have committed a crime and do not need coddling.

Like · Reply · 1 · February 27 at 2:27pm

Mandy [REDACTED] In no way am I excusing this behavior. I am trying to get the point across that there have always been violence in this state, even amongst its "own" people. Its a part of Americas history, if you dont understand something, it is less than you, you fear it, you hate it, get rid of it. more than one person on these threads have used the word assimilation. Its good to know you did spread some knowledge during your studies in the wounded knee massacre. History has a way of repeating itself, especially if we do not humble ouselves to its teachings. This all started with a facebook post. some girls made a horrible violent decision. had a mob mentality reaction. A mother was assaulted while her baby boy was in her arms. No one helped. Maybe two elders did the best they could. Interesting the chain reaction. Its all back to facebook. The Hateful comments far out number the word of encouragement to the victims. No positive peaceful solutions anywhere. Just North Dakotans have always been the best people on earth. This is an out right lie. And we can go all the way back to when we killed all the buffalo to prove it. Or when that kid killed his whole family (think theres been a couple) This is the way ND is now. which is actually the way its always been. Its just escalated like everything else. we can adapt and make changes and grow. Or feed hate and violence and greed and self distract. Im trying to understand how you interpret my statement on Empowerment meaning these people should be coddled? That was taken really far out of context.

Dan Brandon · I understand what you're saying, but also understand that this kind of "diversity" didn't exist in Bismarck until relatively recently. I grew up in Bis. years ago and this kind of activity was unheard of, but was more common place in larger metro hubs. Sure, the racism is unwarranted, but so should that kind of activity. The isolation/insulation from this nonsense is what allowed me to ride my bike through town, at all hours without worrying about my safety. Those memories, also shared by others, are not going to be shared with our children if this crap is allowed.

Like · Reply · February 27 at 11:45am

Brandon This is no worse than anything I saw in a catholic school lunch room growing up in small town North Dakota. I have been here my whole life too, and racist comments like this aren't new either. Our state has gotten more diverse, and the crime has increased. But looking at the actual facts you find most of the crime is not related to the change in demographics. So blaming crime on more black people is simply put a racist stereotype.

Have I ever seen a group of thug girls so brazen as to attack a mother and her child in a mall? No. Never. And I've lived in Las Vegas, near LA, Washington DC and now outside of Boston. This is an unacceptable crime pure and simple, and if it's tolerated now will only get worse.

Quite a few of which I remain friends with today. So don't play your race card with me. I also spent 9 years as a law enforcement officer dealing with people of varying races. Treated them all with respect. You look a bit like a preppy liberal lad who likes to race bait. Bet you've done nothing for your community or country. Just like to follow the crowd. These thugs, which is exactly what they are, deserve to have some good old American justice served on them, regardless of their race. I've never seen that happen in the mall here. Unfortunately it was perpetrated by blacks who then went online bragging about it and daring whites to do anything about. Speaks volumes doesn't it. As I've said I've worked with blacks and still do. Have respect for them when they work hard and show respect for others just as I do whites. If it were whites I'd have no problem calling them thugs. If they hate the town and state so much they should leave.

 Pam This is the most honest post in this entire thread. Every word you said is true. You're not making anything up. People just like to throw the "race" card. Please!! This is not even stereotyping. This is a reality (unfortunately). Most black people behave this way. Period...

 Pam My God, I just read the pix you posted here. They can't even form sentences. "Them whites." God help them.

 Marc Pam  And you can see the fact that they enjoy striking fear in the whites. That's where the thug mentality comes in. They want us to be scared. They want us to consider any action because it'll be misconstrued as racism. So our hands are tied to sit back and watch, which I wouldn't, I couldn't.

 Sheyenne  When I ever I see post like this I think "If black lives matter (or any other life) than why don't they raise their children to be a person society wants to be around? Why act like animals?" But i also know why that's why they have prisons (cages for animal like behavior. That's where these lives are going) Idk just a thought.... Act like your life should matter. Other wise all I hear is "blah blah blah blah"!

 Linda  Marc  - According to their FB posts, they don't like ND. The feeling is mutual, so they can feel free to leave as soon as they're out of jail.

 Marc Linda  I couldn't agree more. I love this state and it makes me ill to see what is happening to it. I know we will never be able to go back to the way things were, but we can always hope. The way that can happen is if thugs like this who hate this place go to wherever it is that they can find like minded people that act like them so they can find their peace. But that isn't happening anytime soon. It'll just be the "norm". Sad ☹

 Marc  Frank  that it is. I saw he commented on a lot of posts saying the same thing. But it's ok. They will always be around trying to do it.
